Spring Cleaning

By: Kyle Steffensen / Myrl & Roy's Paving, Inc.

With the beginning of the production season, it is time for another reset. It is a change in mindset from the winter maintenance. After being shut down during the winter months, we made repairs and updates to all our sites, we cannot neglect one major step. It is time for spring cleaning. Whether it is disposing of materials used in repairs or throwing away the stack of scrap iron that has been hiding in the corner for years, look at everything. Good housekeeping is an important part of any OSHA/MSHA inspection, now is the time to set the bar high for the year.

Spring cleaning does not have to mean throwing away items. Look at the entire site. Do the berms need to be touched up? Can painting be done to improve safety and appearance? Are the haul roads clearly marked so everyone on-site can understand them?

Good housekeeping does not just help during the inspections. It provides for a cleaner, less cluttered environment for all of us to work in. At Myrl & Roy's, we have completed several projects.

- The shop area was completely cleaned.
- New striping was done throughout the site.
- Additional signage has been added.
- A new dumpster pad was poured.
- Floors were scrubbed and cleaned.

The major updates and improvements have been completed over the past two years and now we are focused on the details.

As Georges St-Pierre said, "When you pay attention to the detail, the big picture will take care of itself."

The tire racks help keep our inventory organized and off the ground.

Jesse Jansen neatly lined up the trucks, setting the standard for the year.

Happy Birthday!
