Fireworks over Denver's City and County Building

Happy 249th Birthday to the United States!

Written by Lynn Mayer Shults,
Regulatory Manager, Mountain Division

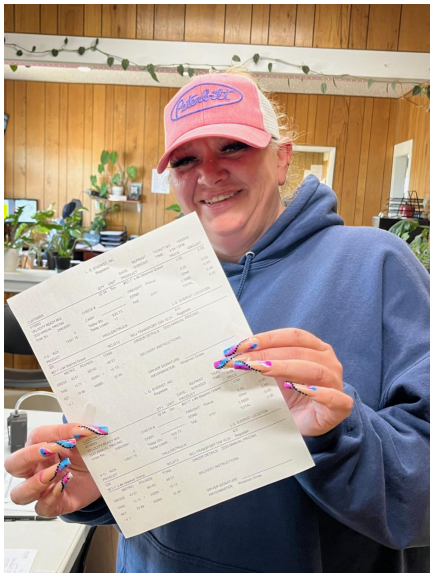

The ratification of the Declaration of Independence by the Second Continental Congress happened 249 years ago, around July 4th, 1776. Those courageous revolutionists declared the United States of America to be separate, independent, and free from Great Britain's laws and taxes. Since that day, communities across the country have been hosting public celebrations which include fireworks, parades, and other events celebrating the history of the United States. And since it is a national holiday, everyone gets to celebrate!

Private Independence Day celebrations are always a joyful highlight of summer for families and friends, young and old. There are so many fun things to do, like picnics, festivals, concerts, baseball games, swimming and so much more. My historic and diverse neighborhood in Denver holds the city's largest Independence Day Parade, with tons of red, white and blue fun. We have a big picnic with friends who live along the parade route and cheer on the eclectic mix of participants as they walk, ride or dance by us. We have Girl Scouts and Boy Scouts; veterans and historical soldiers; classic cars, low-riders, Jeeps, and fire engines; dance troupes and marching bands; and even Princesses and Captain America!

Whatever you do with your family and friends over the long holiday weekend, have fun, get a little rowdy, wear sunscreen, drink lots of water, and let out a cheer!
