Turning the Page

Written by Colin Taylor, Alluvial Area Manager

As my time as a member of the engineering department team comes to a close, I want to take this time to recognize the Department of Preventative Catastrophes, or DPC for short – the Engineering Department.

Whether it is Kevin Oliver predicting that the transfer conveyor would hit at a location (and being right), or Chris Klein patiently walking me through yet another CAD map overlay that he’s helped me with time and time again, I’m constantly reminded of how much I have relied on this team. Nick Hoffman is always stepping up with concrete drawings and noting what details need to be called out, and Travis Buckneberg - doing me another solid by drawing a surface I could not even begin to draw in crayon. The amount of favors I owe Kevin Moeller is endless, and I hope he never decides to collect. Bringing it all together is Lance Pollman, the architect behind it all, guiding me through project after project with the patience of Saint George (the patron saint of mining).

Through all the projects in the last 3 years, I have gained an immense amount of knowledge, respect, and admiration for this team. I am looking forward to continuing to learn from them and working with them for many years to come. The diversity of this team touches many facets of what we do company-wide. So next time you have a project in mind or a tweak you are wondering how it could work, reach out to them. I can say without a doubt that they have the knowledge and know how to help you with it.
