Pieces of LGE History

Written by Rick Everist Jr., Chairman of the Board

Imagine the year 1965 for a moment. Our company was busy with work across the Midwest and Eastern US: airfields, dams, highways, etc. - operating in six states with portable plants, producing rock and sand with our incredible employees . As production ramped up, we needed stacking conveyors to stockpile material, and we did not have very many. The solution, engineered by Steve Everist, was to simply build our own.

Over the course of two winters, we built 17 units - all 100 feet long with 30-inch belts, head and tail folders, with running gear designed to pull them down the road. We did this with our crew in Hawarden, IA, in what was described as a “miserable cold” winter. The stacking conveyors were heavy, awkward, and sometimes cranky, but we used them every day to do what we do best: move material!

Today, all but a few remain. The photo above is Pat Hollenbeck and Raul Sanchez Figueroa next to the scrap pile of old very rusted steel that was a conveyor. As the 60+ year old equipment is retired and scrapped, we reflect on how far we’ve come! This and countless other conveyors have moved millions of tons of material over their lifetime. However small, it’s a tribute to the hardworking folks who came before.
